WHAT MAKES YOU VALUABLE?

Your setup.

Your questions.

Your judgment.

Your move.

— the work stays yours.

You just saw the world that's coming: work shifting, agents acting, systems judging. The last question is the one that matters most: what do you build in yourself so that world works for you?

Part of the answer is practical: setting up the tool so it works for you, from the model you pick to how hard you make it think.

The rest is the edge no tool supplies: framing real problems, judging what matters, bringing an angle the model hasn't seen, and turning all of it into a deliberate next move.

SET UP THE TOOL

1

First, working the tool: which model, how hard it should think, and what to do when you're not sure how to ask.

YOUR EDGE

2

Then, what stays valuable when everyone has the same tool, and how to build it on purpose.

Keep this question in mind: When everyone has AI, what makes my work mine?
